"I think paying to get airtime (payola) for music should actually be prohibited. Stations should have incentives for programming local musicians and innovative repertoire. Allowing radio to get money to play certain artists over others, and not even having to disclose it, goes against diversification and democratization of airwaves. I am assistant professor of music at Santa Clara University."