"Consolidated corporate radio giants like iHeartMedia (Clear Channel), Entercom and Cumulus Media control the vast majority of radio stations across the country. They may not even be all that interested in music. Unless you've got a few million dollars to burn, you won't be getting played. Over the past 20 years, commercial radio has gone from a vibrant and diverse community of mom and pop broadcasters to a national jukebox where just a handful of programming directors— who don't even live in your town or city— make decisions about what you hear. This is bad for musicians. This is bad for music. Big Radio must not be allowed to legalize payola."
