I was in communications in the Army a while back and learned a lot, though I found that there is a lot you don't have to do in the Army that you must in civilian life. I didn't go into any electronics business after especially because of the applied technology aspects, but I did learn thoroughly that I don't have the skills of the applied, wise to know your limitations. Why do they have G.P.S. spread all over every communications device large or small instead of either having it a ground function or a specialized satellite for the service. Please view my fine art oils at: http://goo.gl/6esvKb Thank you for sharing reinforced benefit. Glen Alan Eichhorn I was advised by my discharge papers that there were no civilian related occupations. G.A.E. June 13, 2015