I believe that the only reasonable way to assure that the interests of the American People are protected is to have a government agency involved in regulating the internet. If we let corporations (the ISPs) have all the power, nothing good can come of it. Corporations will do anything they can to increase their profits regardless of whatever detrimental effects we face as consumers. Even those who think that the government is some evil force out to take their freedoms must at least acknowledge the fact that even if this were the case, the government is still the lesser of two evils because at least the People have a voice when it comes to government actions, whereas we have absolutely no power over corporations.
