Chairman Wheeler,

Thank you for taking the time to read my letter. As a concerned citizen, I feel it my duty to write to you related to preserving net neutrality. Net neutrality, as I feel that I should define, being that no cable company or servicer can control the speed of services available to the customer from different companies based on different dealings/payment structures. Net neutrality is critical to preserve in our country as it is part of the ability for our public to become educated, productive individuals. As a country, which prides itself on its ingenuity, and constantly staying ahead in many topics such as science, having accessible information given at a fair and appropriate speed across different types of companies will only foster the ability for sharing of ideas, information, and eventually inventions.

The limitation and monopolization of cable companies on content is similar to the types of tactics that repressive government use to limit freedom of information. I would hope as the current FCC chair, your focus is to advance the commitment America has to the values of freedom of speech, ideas, and expression.

Please be a champion for the people, we need you.

Respectfully,

Mariam Savabi
