I strongly support and urge FCC compliance with Section 225 of the Telecommunications Act to reimburse providers of Speech-to-Speech (STS). Reimbursement must be high enough (due to higher costs involved in order to provide STS service and outreach to STS users) to provide an economic incentive for providers to take the initiative to educate all potential STS users about its availability and how to use STS. Potential STS users have as much legal right to information about STS as the general public has to information about general telephone service. I have to wonder why is it that over 90% of potential STS users don't know that STS exists. That is simply outrageous and unacceptable.
